Kin sue over 'open' casket

The body of a Queens woman murdered by her husband was showered with rocks and dirt when her casket opened as it was being lowered into her grave at a New Jersey cemetery, a lawsuit charges.

The grave was too small, so each time Nequia Webb-Davidson's casket was lowered at Rosehill Cemetery, its lid opened and more dirt and debris rained in on the body, her family claims in the Brooklyn Supreme Court lawsuit filed by attorney Ronald Katter.

Calls seeking comment to the funeral home and cemetery were not returned.
